

Emerging Scholar Award

Nominator Instructions

The Financial Accounting Standards Board (FASB) is seeking nominations for the 2021 FASB Emerging Scholar Award. See below for more about this award and to learn how to nominate a candidate.

Background and Purpose

In an effort to garner additional interest among emerging scholars in research that would be relevant to standard setting, the FASB is seeking nominations for the 2021 FASB Emerging Scholar Award. This award recognizes the proposed doctoral thesis topic judged to be the highest quality in terms of its potential for a rigorous contribution to an issue of interest to accounting standard setting. In addition to being recognized as the winner of the 2021 FASB Emerging Scholar Award, the winning nominee will receive a monetary award from the FASB of $2,500.

Eligibility

The ideal candidate should be in the development process of their dissertation. As such, to be eligible a nominee must have been admitted to candidacy for a PhD degree in accounting and cannot be on the job market before July 1, 2022.

Nomination Process

Candidates must be nominated by a member of their dissertation committee (faculty advisor). To nominate a candidate, the faculty advisor must submit a complete nomination via the nomination portal consisting of the following items:

1. The faculty advisor's letter of nomination including affirmation of their nominee's eligibility for the award.
2. The nominee's responses to the questions included in the nominee instructions file (total word count not to exceed 1,000 words).
3. Nominee's current Curriculum Vitae (CV).

Multiple submissions from faculty advisors will be accepted.

The deadline for submission is November 1, 2021.
